LOCATION

With a population of 21,000 and growing with the city itself, Fort St. John is the largest city in Northeastern BC.

Fort St. John is "The Energetic City" for good reason. The title reflects not only the large resource base of oil, natural gas, forestry and agriculture, but also the vitality of their residents who are, on average, 8.8 years younger than the average population in the rest of the province.

The standard of living is high: The median household income is $107,091 (source: Statistics Canada, 2016), which puts the city first in B.C. and fifth in Canada.

Fort St. John has a full service, 55-bed hospital and family doctors and dentists that are accepting new patients. There are eleven public schools and two post-secondary schools within city limits and endless recreational and cultural opportunities for every member of the family.
